FIRE TO THE PRISONS

Everyone Goes Free

On the night of September 7th, a small group of people dressed in all black converged on Thurston County Jail. With instruments, pots and pans, and fireworks in hand we went in and circled the jail, making noise and shooting off roman candles and mortars to break down the isolation between those held captive on the inside and those of us on the outside. People made a getaway before the police could mount a response and there were no arrests. In a word – we came to the stronghold and home turf of the police, made fools of them and got away. They're not so scary nor so smart after all.
